The work of the heart can never be interrupted. The heart's job is to keep oxygen – rich blood flowing through the body. All the body's cells need a constant supply of oxygen, especially those in the brain. The brain cells live only four to five minutes after their oxygen is cut off, and death comes to the entire body.

The heart is a specialized muscle that services as a pump. This pump is divided into four chambers connected by tiny doors called valves. The chambers work to keep the blood flowing round the body in a circle.

Heart diseases can result from damage to the heart muscle, the valves or the pacemaker. If the muscle is damaged, the heart is unable to pump properly. If the valves are damaged, blood cannot flow normally and easily from one chamber to another, and if the pacemaker is defective, the contractions of the chambers will become un – co-ordinated.

Until the twentieth century, few doctors dared to touch the heart. In 1953, all this changed. After twenty years of work, Dr. John Gibbon of USA had developed a machine that could take over temporarily from the heart and lungs. Blood could be routed through the machine, bypassing the heart so that surgeons could work inside it and see what they were doing. The era of open heart surgery had begun.

Alexander is famous for having treated women with respect. The clearest example of his regard for women took place when he defeated the Persian forces. The Persian King Darius III fled for his life. He departed in such a haste that the royal entourage, including his family (which he had brought to the front lines) was left behind.

After his great victory, Alexander was astounded when he saw the quarters that were left behind on the battlefield by the Persian King.

There were huge piles of gold and silver. Even daily implements were made of gold. There was a magnificent bath tub and luxurious beds.

And the Persian king's family, his elderly mother, the queen, and his two daughters were there as well.

According to the custom of the times, Alexander could have done his worst to these women and no one would blink an eye. Naturally, the women were in the deepest depths of terror and despair.

But Alexander was an honorable person. He immediately had the message conveyed to the women that Darius had escaped with his life; that he, Alexander, would not harm them; and that they would continue to receive the same treatment and protection they had under their own king.

He made every effort to lighten their sense of anxiety and indignity at being taken prisoners. He gave them an allowance bigger than an allowance bigger than they had before.

The old queen mother was so grateful for Alexander's kind treatment that she grew to love and respect him with all her heart. So much so that years later, which he passed away she died of sorrow.

Lazaro Spallanzoni was born in Italy near Modena in 1729. He studied at the University of Bologne, became a priest and eventually was placed in charge of the museum at Pavia.

It common with many scientists of his time, he studied a great number of subjects. He wanted to find out about the digestion of food and experimented first on a vomiting corw, studying what it brought up after varios lengths of time, and second on himself, swallowing bags and tubes of food in order to find out what happened to the food.

Spallanzoni liked to try out experiments done by other people to see whether his findings fitted with theirs.

In 1748 an English priest, John Needham, performed an experiment which he thought proved that organisms could be formed by spontaneous generation. Needham boiled some mutton broth and put it in a jar, taking special pains to seal the jar, so that no one would be able to say that living organisms has been brought in by the air. When he opened the jar a few days later it was full of organisms. He tried the experiment with other substances and always got the same result.

Spallanzoni respected Needham's experiments twenty years later. First he boiled seeds in water, sealed them, and opened them after a few days. He found as Needham did that they were full of life. Next he tried excluding air altogether. He took two batches of jars, sealed one batch with a blow pipe and boiled it, and left the other batch open to air. This time the first batch had very few organisms in it while the other was full of them. Now he tried boiling the flasks for half an hour, instead of for a few minutes. The result showed no organism when the flasks were opened. From these experiments Spallanzoni decided that where organism had appeared they had come form invisible eggs some of these orgasms could with stand being boiled for a short time but none could live through the prolonged boiling that Spallanzoni subjected them to.

4. One of the processes to separate the coffee seeds form their covering and from the pump is the wet process.

In the wet process the fresh print is first pulped by a pulping machine. Some pulp still clings to the coffee, however and this residue is removed by fermentation in tanks. The few remaining traces of pulp are then, removed by washing. The coffee seeds are then dried to a moisture content of about 12 percent either by exposure to the sun or by hot air driers. If dried in the sun, they must be turned by hand several times a day for even drying.
